Rural Electric Cooperatives of Missouri

Nearly 600,000 rural Missouri members provide themselves with electric power at cost through their locally-owned, locally controlled Rural Electric Cooperatives listed herein.

Each nonprofit rural electric system is owned by the members it serves and operates under the guidance of a board of directors elected by the membership. The board employs a manager to carry out its policies. Electric co-ops are financed through loans from private sector, Wall Street and the Rural Utilities Service-USDA.

Before the first rural electric co-op was organized in 1937, only 1 out of 20 rural Missouri families had electricity. Today over 99 percent are electrified.

AMEC HISTORY

The Association of Missouri Electric Cooperatives is the statewide trade association of the 40 Missouri distribution rural electric systems. Membership is voluntary. Its aim and purposes are explained by its bylaws:

"To create an interest in, and to promote and foster the growth of rural electrification through cooperation; to assist in the organization of rural electrification cooperatives and corporations; to gather and disseminate information relative to the organization, operation and management of rural electric cooperatives and corporations; to secure information concerning and to encourage the use of improved practices, methods, tools, and equipment in the operation and maintenance of electric systems; to act in the interest of rural electrification in matters before national, state, county and municipal legislative bodies, and before all administrative and regulatory agencies."

The first meeting of this statewide association was held February 11, 1937. At that time the organization was called "The Missouri State Rural Electrification Association" and operated under that name until 1965, when, in the interest of brevity, the present name was adopted.

Through the years the statewide organization has sponsored many major achievements to further the rural electric program.

It sponsored the Missouri Rural Electric Cooperative Act of 1939 under which Missouri Cooperatives operate. It was among the earliest state associations to send delegates to Washington, D.C. in 1941 to urge an OPM program of rural connections for food production which was carried out.

The association sponsored a pole procurement program in 1946 which helped break the bottleneck in pole delivery.

More recently, the statewide organization has provided continuing assistance to member systems with their annual meetings, job training and safety, joint purchasing, legislative research, public relations services and publication of the monthly RURAL MISSOURI.

GREEN RUNS DEEP

“Our foundation is based on family, character and values. These values play directly into our culture. It’s not something you can necessarily put into words. Being a Brother’s or Sister’s Keeper is more than a title. It’s a responsibility that everyone takes pride in. In our world, green runs deep.”

RUS (REA) — The Rural Electrification Administration is the banker for the rural electrification program. Created in 1935, REA makes long-term loans to both cooperatives and companies for the purpose of bringing electric power to rural areas. The relationship between REA and the rural electric cooperatives is that of a banker to borrower. REA is a government agency under the Department of Agriculture.

The Pace Act — passed in 1944, extended the repayment period for REA loans from 25 to 35 years. It establishes REA as a permanent agency and set the interest rate on REA loans at a flat 2 percent. In return, Congress made it clear that it expected the co-ops to provide "area coverage" — something not achieved under the shorter loan period and flexible interest rates applying to earlier years.

Area Coverage — This concept holds that all applicants in an area served by a rural electric system would receive electric service, the investment required to extend the service notwithstanding.

REC — The abbreviation for Rural Electric Cooperative. An REC is a nonprofit electric supplier organized for the purpose of bringing electric power to consumers within specified rural areas. A tax-paying, free-enterprise organization, the REC is owned and controlled by the people it serves.

The Rural Electrification Act of 1936 made available federal loans to cooperatives and companies in order to bring electricity to rural America. These loans must be paid back within 35 years with interest. In exchange for the loans and the favorable interest rate, the cooperatives and companies agree to provide area coverage with electric service.

AMEC — Association of Missouri Electric Cooperatives. The statewide association of Missouri electric cooperatives, organized and controlled by the member rural electric cooperatives throughout the state. The cooperatives formed the state association to realize greater economy by pooling services in one central organization.

Among the services offered to member cooperatives by the state association are assistance with member co-op annual meetings, safety and job training for co-op employees, legislative research, public relations services, and publication of the monthly RURAL MISSOURI.

NRECA — The National Rural Electric Cooperative Association is a nonpartisan, nonprofit, service organization for the mutual benefit of its members.

G & T — This is the abbreviation for generation and transmission. G & T cooperatives are organized by other rural electric cooperatives to act as the wholesale supplier of electric energy. REA loans are made only when adequate power is not available from other sources, power costs would be less from the G & T than from other sources, or the security of the co-op is jeopardized by unstable or unsatisfactory power sources.

In Missouri the generation and transmission cooperatives have pooled their power supplies and interconnected them with several power company systems. This pooling achieves maximum efficiency and dependability of service to consumers.
